Preparing for Natural Disasters

As Alaskans, we welcome change that comes this time of year. Breakup begins; snow melts; it snows again; and spring starts to turn the corner to summer. Changing seasons create new opportunities and challenges. The changing weather often brings unpredictable conditions, and recent devastation from natural disasters reminds us all to prepare for the unexpected.

I appreciate the daily and consistent disaster planning efforts of the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs. Your preparation lays the groundwork for effective emergency response by building strong communities and teaching others how to assist during emergencies. Preparation in the face of potential disaster is one of the greatest assets we can give Alaska communities, and you prepare us in so many ways.

The Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management actively monitors weather conditions and river levels to warn communities of potential threats when necessary. From past experiences, we know these conditions are equally as dangerous as earthquakes and volcanic eruptions.

Additionally, the Alaska National Guard provides assistance to local responders during disasters. The current focus is on training new Guard members in skills that apply to both the military and civilian community. This training equips Guard members with the experience, knowledge, and resources necessary for local response and international response during deployment.

As always, our Alaska National Guard continues to embody the motto "Always ready, always there." Thank you for your hard work ensuring that Alaska remains a more secure place for all of us to call home. ■

DMVA Acts Quickly in Wake of Japanese Quake

Alaska is an unforgiving land, and her residents have experienced many of the world's worst natural and man-made disasters. Living in a tumultuous state, we must prepare ourselves for the inevitable catastrophic event and stay vigilant in our planning.

We recently witnessed the destruction a magnitude 8.9 earthquake can have on a country – Japan – and even experienced the follow-on effects through tsunami warnings and radiation monitoring here in Alaska. Natural disasters are a real threat to our citizens, and as members of the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs, we prepare for them by synchronizing all of our efforts with other state and federal agencies.

Following the earthquake in Japan, DMVA's Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management immediately activated the State Emergency Coordination Center. Working closely with the National Weather Service and Alaska Pacific Tsunami Center, our dedicated professionals contacted each community emergency manager in the tsunami warning zones to make sure they were aware of the warnings and advisories. The risk was high, but we were prepared to help mitigate further damage.

In the following days, C-17s with Alaska National Guardsmen and active-duty personnel departed Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson to assist disaster victims. In Alaska, the state's Department of Health and Social Services, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Defense worked closely with DMVA to quell fears of radiation from the damaged Japanese nuclear reactor.

We were prepared as an organization to respond, address threats, and provide resources, working closely with our state and federal partners. Our focus on training, prevention and communication through solid partnerships was critical, and together as the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs, we will continue to ensure that the public can trust in our ability to provide support when the next disaster strikes Alaska. ■

Prepare your motorpool for DSCA and MSCA with Phantom StormLights™

COVERT TO OVERT

Military vehicles are designed to be covert on the battlefield. Dull paint and infrared lights enhance that requirement on a deployment. When those same vehicles are called to duty on the home front, however, that coyness can lead to catastrophe! Unwary civilians can roll right up on those vehicles hidden by foliage, harsh rain or blinding snow—damaging vehicles and Soldiers alike.

When you are called for a DSCA or MSCA mission, be sure to pack a Phantom StormLight™ kit for each vehicle in the convoy! These kits include rapidly deployable lighting systems to make sure that the vehicle can be SEEN!

The Phantom StormLight™ system is comprised of lights that can mount on the windshield (powered by a cigarette lighter/accessory plug or to the BUSS bar underneath the driver's seat). Rear-end collisions are avoided by mounting another Phantom Stormlight™ to the rear bumper, drawing power from the adjacent clearance light.

Pack by Tactical Tailor®

Larger kit options include portable hand held lights, battery powered solid state MightyFlares™, road guard vests, jumper cables and tie down straps. Additionally, kits can be customized for your convenience.

Exterior mount (LEFT) bolts to existing hole on bumper, drawing power from adjacent clearance light.

Interior mount (RIGHT) attaches to windshield with adjustable suction cups, drawing power from accessory plug.

Guardisman Reflects on Iraq Orphanage Visit

By Colonel Jerry Kidrick
Alaska Army National Guard

BASRAH PROVINCE, Afghanistan ...
I experienced a few very poignant moments the other day for several reasons.

First, let me explain that I'm a traditional Guardsman in the Alaska National Guard currently on active duty in Iraq. I'm assigned as chief of a military transition team of combat advisors in Basrah Province.

A poignant moment for me came in November 2010 at the Al-Zahraa Orphanage in downtown Basrah where we delivered donated items to the orphans. For reasons we are all familiar with, there is a great need in Iraq for many of the basics that we in the United States take for granted.

So, our team decided to solicit assistance in collecting donated items in the States and have them shipped to us here in Basrah. We received an overwhelming and immediate response.

Through my connection with Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University in Prescott, Ariz., the Student Veterans Club solicited donations. The response was immediate, generous and heartfelt. This was my first poignant moment.

These great veterans who have served and are now attending college were willing and eager to once again serve something larger than themselves, put aside any personal issues they might have and step up to meet the obvious need of the innocent victims of the ongoing struggle in Iraq.

It struck me that the same spirit of the American servicemen and women that produced things like the Berlin Candy Drop during the Berlin Airlift and the outpouring of care for the many orphans of the Korean War exists in National Guard Warriors today. In fact, the character of American service members never shines brighter than when they are helping innocent victims of war. I was moved by their efforts.

A varied group of generous folks in Salem, Ore., also contributed to the project. Captain Steve Cooper of the Oregon National Guard made a simple request for a few soccer balls and soon found himself getting a workout with a small hand pump and 80 soccer balls.

Soccer is really the national game in Iraq, and delivery of these items brought huge grins from the children. This was the moment I was moved for the second time, and it was by the reaction of the children.

Poignant Moments. Colonel Jerry Kidrick, Alaska Army National Guard, hands a piece of candy to a young boy at the Al-Zahraa Orphanage in Basrah, Iraq.

It was truly a joyful moment. They reacted with pure joy and innocence as if their lot in life was no more or less than anyone else's. The children are well cared for, appreciative and a pleasure to be around.

The smaller children prepared a song with the help of some of the older girls. The children who were a little older wanted to meet us, thank us, practice their English, and generally interact in a very open and friendly way. Again, I was moved by these children.

Another aspect of this project that has been a pleasure to be a part of is the reaction of the MiTT members. As a group, they have embraced the project, and the result has been overwhelmingly positive for team morale.

As I mentioned at the beginning, my poignant moments resulted from several reasons. However, probably the most poignant aspect of this project for me is the fact that I'm the proud father of two orphaned children from Cambodia.

Until this visit, it had been nine years since I last walked into an orphanage. I picked up my then-four-month old son at an orphanage in Phnom Penh. I have first-hand knowledge of the positive impact orphaned children can have on everyone they touch.

As you can tell, my trip with the MiTT to the orphanage touched me in many ways, and created such positive energy for both the giver and receiver, including those back home providing the main effort for this project.

In a country where the gains are small and the need great, I would like to think that a few National Guardsmen backed by caring folks back home brought some brightness into the lives of those on both sides of this humanitarian project. ■

Guard Hoists Four Skiers Out of Avalanche

By Private First Class Karina Paroan, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Airmen with the Alaska Air National Guard were called on in late January to rescue four avalanche victims who were backcountry skiing behind the Summit Lake Lodge in Moose Pass.

The request for assistance came from the Alaska State Troopers, and because of the high probability of another avalanche and the inability to land within half a mile from the location of the survivors, the 11th Rescue Coordination Center tasked the 210th and 212th Rescue Squadrons with the mission.

The 210th responded with a hoist-equipped HH-60 Pave Hawk carrying 212th pararescuemen and flew out to the location. It took approximately 35 minutes to get on site.

"It was a great team effort," said Lieutenant Colonel Paul Vanderweide, director of the 11th RCC. "Luckily one of the guys was not buried in the snow and was able to help dig the others out."

After performing a hoist, three of the survivors were taken to an Anchorage hospital and the other survivor was released to the Alaska State Troopers.

The Alaska Air National Guard's 210th and 212th Rescue Squadrons were awarded one save for this mission. ■

Deployment Preparations

By Lieutenant Colonel Paul Darling

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ...

The road to war is a long one for deploying Guardsmen, and along the way, those Soldiers need help to prepare themselves, their equipment and their families for the upcoming challenges of deployment.

B Company, 1-143rd Infantry (Airborne), scheduled to deploy to Afghanistan in late fall, took the first of many steps on that road to deployment in mid-February.

The first step was to consolidate all the Soldiers, spread throughout western Alaska in 24 separate detachments stretching from Nome to Dillingham, and bring them to Anchorage to work on specific Warrior tasks.

Deploying Guardsmen are responsible for passing more than 300 pre-mobilization tasks in order to be fully prepared and eligible for overseas deployment. The Alaska Army National Guard has a trained group of professionals, the Pre-Mobilization Training Assistance Element, to ensure that these tasks are conducted to standard.

In addition to the mandatory training, a Soldier Readiness Program was held. Work was done to ensure that each Soldier's many required personnel documents were up to date, accurate and verified. The state's Judge Advocates General worked jointly on wills and powers of attorney for all Soldiers requesting them.

The medical detachment conducted more than 100 various physicals, verifying the health and readiness of the infantrymen as they prepare for combat. In addition, the medical detachment conducted combat life-saver training for 41 deploying Guardsmen, teaching them the critical skills necessary for combat survival.

All this preparation work is hard, but for the growing number of paratroopers in the company, the work was rewarded as they conducted a jump led by Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general of the Alaska National Guard, from an Alaska Army National Guard C-23 Sherpa over Malamute Drop Zone on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson.

"The Soldier Readiness Program went very well, and all Soldiers were taken care of in a timely and professional manner," said Captain Jason Caldwell, B Company, 1-143rd Infantry commander. "The first sergeant, staff and I could not have asked for a better consolidation drill to prepare for our upcoming deployment." ■

Arctic Skills. Members of the Alaska National Guard's 103rd Civil Support Team proudly display their 2nd place trophy from the Arctic Skills competition on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson in February. The Arctic Skills competition is a two-part event in which participants cross-country ski and snowshoe an approximate three-kilometer course. It's an annual event designed to highlight the unique outdoor opportunities Alaska offers that service members might not have the opportunity to do if they were based elsewhere. ## Guardsmen Use Talent "For God and Country"

By Second Lieutenant Bernie Kale
DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... When Chief Master Sergeant Timothy Tillman of the Alaska Air National Guard deployed to southwest Asia last fall, his goal was to start a barbershop quartet. But how it fell into place, and the impact his deployed quartet has made, has created quite a buzz.

"Whenever I hear the national anthem played at ceremonies with instruments only Deployment Music. "For God and Country," a quartet formed by a deployed Alaska Air National Guardsman, sings at one of the many Christmas events during their deployment to southwest Asia. The group was so popular and their performance such a hit, they had to sing a few of the songs twice at the request of their audience. and no words, I offer to sing it the next time," Tillman said. "I feel the words of our anthem are important and need to be heard."

Tillman volunteered to be the worship leader during the Protestant chapel service and was in the position for a few weeks when he heard Senior Airman Chris Barajas sing. Tillman knew then he had the second member of the group.

"I knew it would be difficult to find a tenor," Tillman said. "But as soon as I heard Chris sing, I recognized that he would make a great fit as a tenor."

After the service, Tillman approached Barajas and asked him if he had sung with any barbershop quartets.

"He responded positively and started listing off his favorite barbershop quartets," Tillman joked. "I knew then I was well on my way to starting the group."

Soon rehearsals began when two more deployed Airmen joined the group, forming "For God and Country."

"The reason we named it that is because we were all serving our country and volunteering our free time in the chapel's music programs," Tillman said.

Tillman used his connections as a member of an Alaska quartet in training his deployed quartet. The group responded by sending music, helping the quartet learn tracks and come together as performers.

With a little practice, the group began singing the national anthem and other music at events.

"To say the least, wing members were amazed that we could produce the sound that we did," Tillman said. "At one event, the crowd wanted us to sing more, even after we sang all the songs we knew. So we ended up singing a few songs twice, and they loved it."

Tillman said he is grateful that the members of "For God and Country" were able to use their voices to boost the morale of deployed members around them.

"I am thrilled that we were able to pull it off during our short deployment together," Tillman said. "It's been a great run with fantastic results, and I am just happy to be a part of it." ■

Airmen Complete Construction Mission

By Staff Sergeant N. Alicia Goldberger
176th Wing Public Affairs

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON, Alaska ...

Alaska Air National Guardsmen from the 176th Civil Engineer Squadron spent two weeks in March doing construction work on San Clemente Island, Calif.

The Guard members were on a Deployment for Training mission. These missions allow Air National Guard members to sharpen their construction trades skills while at the same time meeting real-world needs. Such training keeps Airmen mission-ready in the event they are called overseas.

"The DFT program is an invaluable tool for training opportunities not available at home station," said Senior Master Sergeant Keith Wilson, operations superintendent for the mission.

Naval Special Warfare Group One Maritime Operations, stationed out of San Clemente Island, requested civil engineering support for several projects such as wiring, plumbing and masonry.

"These trips are great because they train Airmen, boost morale and give value to the United States by providing cost-effective construction services to other units," said Lieutenant Colonel Ed Soto, 176th Civil Engineer Squadron commander. ■

Alaska National Guard and Iron Dog Partnership a Success

By Kalei Rupp, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The Alaska National Guard's support of the 2011 Iron Dog snowmachine race was a success, with the pro-class team and ambassador team rider saying this year's event was a great experience that provided a unique venue to strengthen the Alaska National Guard across the state.

For the second year in a row, the Alaska National Guard was the presenting partner for the Iron Dog. The Guard became the lead sponsor in 2009 in order to support a uniquely Alaska event and bolster the Alaska National Guard throughout the state and nation.

"The Alaska National Guard is an incredible partner; we're grateful for the support and extremely proud to be working side by side with them," said Kevin Kastner, Iron Dog executive director. "Programs like the ambassador team and the urban-rural student exchange gave the Guard first-hand exposure to communities, students and centers of influence across more than 2,000 miles of Alaska."

In a first for the Iron Dog, there was an ambassador team of riders, including an Alaska Army National Guardsman, serving as goodwill ambassadors for the race. The team of three traveled the race route and made several public appearances along the way.

"We were able to speak at schools and with community leaders, and as we stopped at each checkpoint, we handed out National Guard Army Values coins to the volunteers and thanked them for their support of the Guard and the Iron Dog," said Lieutenant Colonel Joseph Lawendowski, Alaska Army National Guard Recruiting and Retention commander and ambassador team rider. "While in Nome we spoke to the entire high school about a variety of topics to include suicide prevention and our Choices program, where we show students the consequences of behaviors and decisions they make, in hopes of changing their decision patterns for the better."

The outreach into communities is something that will carry on despite the end of the official race.

"We hope to not only continue our partnership with the Iron Dog and to continue our efforts with the Ambassador Run in the future but also continue to foster this relationship with the racers in our efforts to reach out and assist Alaska's youth in the west," Lawendowski said.

Command Sergeant Major Pamela Harrington, of Palmer, and Sergeant First Class Elaine Jackson, of Anchorage, represented the Alaska National Guard in the pro-class division of the Iron Dog, known as the world's longest and toughest snowmobile race. It was an especially tough race this year, as a winter storm made portions of the trail impassable with what race officials called "life-threatening" conditions. The race was put on hold mid-race, then later, riders grouped into teams to take a "yellow-flag" expedition for a resumed race start some 250 miles down the trail.

The Guard team didn't get a chance to make it to that portion of the race, however. Tricky trail conditions, rutted out portions of the trail and deep snow held Harrington and Jackson to a slower pace than they anticipated. Race officials scratched the team at the Ruby checkpoint because it was determined that the Guard team wouldn't make it to the Nome half-way checkpoint by the required time and date.

"We had planned to do this marathon run, get our two-hour layover done and just make it into Nome," Harrington said. "In my mind, we were going to be the team that rolled in at 11:58 p.m. ahead of that 11:59 p.m. deadline, but if you did the math, that would have been hard."

Race officials did some calculations of their own and decided to scratch the team, citing time and safety as the reason. Harrington and Jackson actually made it to Galena, 52 miles down the trail from Ruby, before race officials notified them that they had scratched the team in Ruby.

"We were going to go until they told us to stop," Harrington said.

Despite the end result, the race experience was a tremendous opportunity, the team said. They were the only all-female team of 28 teams to race in the 2011 pro-class, which traversed more than 2,000 miles of trail from Big Lake to Nome, then on to Fairbanks. Of the 28 teams that started the race, only 12 crossed the finish line.

"Overall, I have no disappointments. My experience this year was very good; it was a challenging year on the trail, but it's an event that I absolutely love," Jackson said. "I definitely want to be a part of it next year in one way or another. Even if I'm not racing, I would love to help out and volunteer and get the Guard name out there." ■

Riding. Command Sergeant Major Pamela Harrington and Sergeant First Class Elaine Jackson, both of the Alaska Army National Guard, take their new snowmachines out for a test ride on Big Lake in February just days before the start of the Iron Dog race. ## Aviation Safety is Top Priority

Safety First. An Alaska Army National Guard UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter takes off from the Palmer Municipal Airport in August after helping to recover a disabled Black Hawk from Knik Glacier in August 2010. The incident, coupled with an Alaska Air National Guard C-17 crash, spurred the Alaska National Guard to do an internal review of its safety procedures and to stress safety as the organization's number one priority. CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Before the flight suits are zipped and the helmets are donned, it's the first thing to cross the mind of anyone involved in Alaska National Guard aviation. Before the wrenches turn and checklists completed, it is the predominant issue in everyone's work day – safety.

Two incidents in 2010 involving Alaska National Guard aviation – a C-17 accident and UH-60 Black Hawk mishap – have prompted the aviation departments of both the Alaska Air and Army National Guard to do an internal review of their safety procedures. It's the organization's number one priority.

"Mission and safety go hand in hand. You do not accomplish the mission if you compromise the safety of the crew," said Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general of the Alaska National Guard. "Safety is something that must be performed seamlessly and integrated into every activity we do. It has to be our top priority."

Since an Alaska Army National Guard Black Hawk went down on Knik Glacier, the Alaska Army National Guard implemented monthly safety stand-down days and weekly work groups that systematically look at the aviation risk assessment procedure. Some of those changes have included the time of the mission, the crew flying and whether the mission itself is worth the risk.

"It's not an overnight fix; this has been looked at carefully, and some situations that used to be viewed as a low risk have been moved up to a higher degree of risk. Aviation is a risky business," said Lieutenant Colonel Michael Seine, state army aviation officer, Alaska Army National Guard, who has been in the position since April 2010. "Our emphasis is risk mitigation: to reduce it to the lowest possible factor."

The Alaska Air National Guard is no different. On top of numerous U.S. Air Force Aviation Publication changes, accidents affect the aviation community on an individual basis.

"Quite often, when any incident like the C-17 accident happens, everyone takes a look at how they are conducting business," said Major Russell Edwards, 176th Wing flying safety officer. He added that while the mission is the priority, it has to be accomplished safely.

"The Alaska Air National Guard's ideal situation is zero accidents and zero fatalities, but that is only accomplished on a flight by flight basis," Edwards said. "All people on board have to be safety monitors, and if they see something that doesn't look right, they need to say something."

Safety starts with every Guard member involved. Everyone must assess the risk because every flight is different and every mission is unique.

"You could have one hour and have an accident or you could have thousands of hours and have an accident," Seine said. "Our priority is reducing the risk of each specific mission. If we can minimize the risk of each mission and flight, the accident-free hours will be the byproduct." ■

Guardsmen Save 125 Lives in 2010

By Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Alaska National Guardsmen are recognized for their expertise in search and rescue, and for 125 people here in Alaska or in combat zones in Afghanistan during 2010, they're also considered "Guardian Angels."

Since 1994, Alaska National Guardsmen have supported the 11th Rescue Coordination Center, the sole Alaska representative responsible for all aeronautical search and rescue cases in Alaska, with search and rescue assets, flying more than 20,000 mission hours and earning more than 1,800 saves and 800 assists.

Supporting an unforgiving land, with a road system that covers a relatively small area of the state, Alaska National Guardsmen provide a sense of security in a place where all too often the National Guard represents the last chance for survival.

"Our 'Guardian Angel' teams are survival experts. When they get on-scene, the chances of survival greatly improve right away," said Brigadier General Charles E. "Chuck" Foster, 176th Wing commander, Alaska Air National Guard. "They have truly made the difference in the lives of hundreds of Alaskans because of their heroic efforts."

In addition to performing day-to-day support in Alaska, Guardsmen from the 212th Rescue Squadron, Alaska Air National Guard, also deployed to Afghanistan from August 2010 to March 2011 to support combat search and rescue missions in the Global War on Terrorism. Alaska Guardsmen were credited with saving 61 lives and assisting 99 others to safety during 144 missions in the final four months of 2010.

"Alaska Air National Guardsmen from the 212th Rescue Squadron are at the tip of the spear, using the training received here in Alaska to save service men and women in combat," Foster said. "They put their lives on the line every day to save others, proving once again they're among the elite in search and rescue worldwide."

The Alaska Army National Guard also plays a role in search and rescue missions in Alaska and contributed to saving 11 lives in 2010.

"Alaska National Guardsmen set the bar when it comes to rescuing our military members in a combat zone in Afghanistan or civilians on a mountainside in Alaska," said Major General Thomas H. Katkus, their efforts no matter what the circumstance, time or place. They embody the best of all Alaska National Guardsmen." ■

ALASKANS ASSIST WOUNDED WARRIORS WITH 'PROPER EXIT' IN IRAQ

By Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... For many service members, days spent deployed overseas start to blend together. However, for eight Alaska National Guardsmen serving in Iraq, one day stands apart, the day they had the privilege to support Operation Proper Exit.

A program that provides combat veterans the opportunity to return to the location where they were injured, Operation Proper Exit provides wounded warriors a chance to retrace their final steps before going home.

"The program allows service members to leave on their own terms," said Lieutenant Peter Pagni, pilot, B Company, 1-207th Aviation, Alaska Army National Guard.

Pagni, who has been deployed for seven months in support of Operation New Dawn, spends most of his days, like others in his unit, performing the vital mission of transporting distinguished visitors, Soldiers and equipment via UH-60 Black Hawks from camp to camp in Iraq.

He's proud to be an Alaska Army National Guardsman and honored to perform his daily mission, but according to him, this mission was even more special.

"It was great and probably the best thing I've done over here," Pagni said. "We flew 10 warriors from the Air Force, Marines and Army over the exact areas they had been injured. None of them actually remember leaving the spot they were injured at, but they were happy about seeing it for one last time before they left."

It was a day full of emotions, especially for one Soldier who lost a friend at the final location they flew over.

"The last guy had lost both bottom portions of his legs by Sadr City; it was pretty emotional for him because he lost a buddy right there, and he was wearing his buddy's bracelet," Pagni said. "We flew right over the spot on the road."

At the end of the day, Pagni and his fellow Alaska National Guard aviators helped bring a little closure and, surprisingly, even happiness to a few of America's finest warriors.

"They were definitely the most appreciative group of people I've ever met," Pagni said. "They were happy because this allowed them to leave on their own terms, and I'm glad I got to be a part of that." ■

Tsunami Preparedness

By Jeremy Zidek, DHS&EM Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... In a tsunami, seconds can mean the difference between life and death. A tsunami siren, a well-marked tsunami evacuation route and individuals warning others can give people critical time to reach safety. Alaska, with more than 70 communities that face some tsunami danger, is continuously improving the systems, plans and training that prepare our people for the next big wave.

Tsunamis, almost all of which are caused by earthquakes, have tremendous destructive power and can send millions of gallons of water surging beyond normal coastal confines, inundating inland areas and sweeping away anything in its wake. They can strike a community in a matter of minutes or travel thousands of miles to wreak havoc.

The 1964 Good Friday earthquake led to tsunamis that immediately struck Seward with enough force to sweep a railroad locomotive 100 feet inland and also caused 12 deaths in Crescent City, Calif., thousands of miles away.

“Community emergency managers are the driving force behind efforts to reduce the threat of tsunamis in Alaska,” said Mark Roberts, Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management Mitigation Program manager. “They understand the tsunami threat, acknowledge their responsibility to prepare their community, and look for every opportunity to improve the technology, plans and equipment to reduce the tsunami risk.”

Across the state, communities continually increase their ability to deal with the threat of tsunamis. Local and state training events and exercises equip emergency managers and first responders with the knowledge, experience, and well-honed skills so they can quickly warn people about an impending tsunami threat and respond to inundations if a tsunami strikes.

In November 2010, 35 key personnel from 14 tsunami-threatened communities met in Unalaska to participate in a Tsunami Operations workshop. Participants left with an increased understanding of specific actions required during and after a tsunami warning/event. The workshop also gave communities the opportunity to share best practices and lessons learned with peers.

“Tsunami readiness is essential,” said Jamie Sunderland, emergency manager for Unalaska. “It goes beyond equipment maintenance and requires practicing the plan through training and exercise to keep it fresh.”

The Alaska National Guard is an active participant in tsunami readiness and other exercises. In October 2010, the Kenai Community Emergency Response Team, Kenai Fire Department, Kenai Office of Emergency Management and Alaska Army National Guard’s B Troop, 297th Reconnaissance and Surveillance, teamed up to practice their unified response to a simulated tsunami.

The Kenai CERT utilized its search and rescue training, the Kenai Fire Department acted as the incident command, the Kenai OEM activated its command vehicle and

Leadership Changes at 168th Air Refueling Wing

By Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The Alaska Air National Guard's 168th Air Refueling Wing welcomed a new commander in March and also said goodbye to a commander they truly respected.

Colonel Donald S. "Scott" Wenke, departing the wing he has commanded since April 2008, relinquished command to Colonel Timothy P. O'Brien.

"It was an honor to serve the last three years as the 168th Air Refueling Wing commander," Wenke said. "The men and women of this organization are some of the finest Airmen in today's total force military. Each and every one of them represents our great state with excellence all around the world."

As commander, Wenke was responsible for nine KC-135R Stratotankers and provided leadership and support to more than 675 Guardsmen at Eielson Air Force Base and Clear Air Force Station.

"Colonel Wenke is a phenomenal leader who has a proven track record," said Major General Thomas H. Katkus, adjutant general of the Alaska National Guard. "He successfully led the Air National Guard's busiest air refueling wing, while providing a reliable alert force and air refueling capability to NORAD for northern sovereignty missions. Colonel Wenke is a respected leader who knows how to get the job done – under the most difficult circumstances here in Alaska or deployed overseas."

A few of the notable accomplishments during Wenke's tenure as commander of the 168th Air Refueling Wing include selection for the Air Force Outstanding Unit Award, two consecutive governor's trophies, an "excellent" overall grade in the Pacific Air Forces Operational Readiness Inspection, 60,000 wing flying hours without a chargeable class A or B mishap and the General Lance W. Lord award.

Wenke is a command pilot with more than 4,500 flying hours in the F-4, A-10 and KC-135, including 82 combat missions and 326 combat flying hours. His next assignment is as vice wing commander of the 176th Wing at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson.

"I am very excited for the 'Guardians of the Last Frontier' in the coming years, as they are getting a tremendous leader in Colonel Tim O'Brien," Wenke said.

"I have the utmost confidence that he and Catherine will continue to achieve great accolades with these fine Airmen."

"I have large footsteps to follow with Colonel Wenke's departure, and I am deeply grateful to his superior service here at the wing," O'Brien said. "I'm deeply humbled and honored to be named commander of the finest wing in the Air National Guard."

O'Brien previously served as vice wing commander of the 168th Wing. He has also commanded a combat search and rescue helicopter squadron, held a variety of operational flying and staff assignments at the wing level, completed Headquarters Air Force staff assignment in acquisition and requirements and was the commandant of the U. S. Air Force Officer Training School. He is a command pilot with more than 3,300 flying hours.

Colonel Donald S.
"Scott" Wenke

Colonel Timothy P. O'Brien

"I look forward to serving alongside our men and women of the 168th," O'Brien said. "Our missions of Global Reach and Vigilance are truly critical to our state and nation. We have amazingly talented men and women who continually impress me with their excellence and service to our Air National Guard."

The 168th Air Refueling Wing provides Air Force capabilities of Global Reach and Vigilance through the combined operations of Air Refueling and Space Warning Squadrons. The unit also maintains a constant watch and commitment for Pacific Air Forces, Northern and Air Force Space Commands and Alaskan NORAD Region. ■

176TH MOVES INTO NEW HOME

By Staff Sergeant N. Alicia Goldberger and First Lieutenant John Callahan, 176th Wing Public Affairs; Second Lieutenant Bernie Kale, DMVA Public Affairs; and Luke Waak, JBER Public Affairs

KULIS AIR NATIONAL GUARD BASE, Alaska ... The 176th Wing completed one of the largest missions in its history in February, moving all its aviation assets and most of the wing from Kulis Air National Guard Base to Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson.

“Although we love this area around Kulis and will always be connected to it, JBER offers the wing growth as a team and a partnership that works,” said Brigadier General Charles “Chuck” Foster, 176th Wing commander.

The Fly-Away Ceremony

Military members, families, retirees and media spilled out near the flight line to watch and wave as five C-130 cargo planes, four HH-60 Pave Hawk helicopters, and two HC-130 Hercules aircraft took off and circled around for a fly-by on their way to JBER.

Among the attendees were some notable names, including the son of the base’s namesake, First Lieutenant Albert Kulis, and retired Colonel Marjorie Paulson, the first female in the Alaska Air National Guard.

After the planes departed, spectators made their way to the wing’s new facilities on JBER. The group skirted the flight line to watch the aircraft fly in to their new home.

Wing History

The ceremony celebrating the relocation was dubbed “Coming Full Circle” in reference to the 176th Wing’s history.

The 176th Wing began as the 8144th Air Base Wing in 1952 with 11 enlisted members, five officers and no planes. The small staff worked out of an office in downtown Anchorage. Shortly thereafter, the wing received one T-6G “Texan” trainer, and the members trained out of Elmendorf Air Force Base.

The wing underwent a series of changes in missions, aircraft, size and location. It moved to the then-new Kulis Air National Guard Base in 1954 as the 144th Fighter-Bomber Squadron.

The 1960s through the 1990s brought even more growth and adjustment. In 1995, the organization became the 176th Wing.

Throughout the wing’s history, it has been an integral part of the community and military. From the 1964 earthquake to the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill to the myriad of plane crash victim recoveries, the 176th Wing has been one of Alaska’s premier public-service organizations.

Why move?

The move to JBER has been five years in the making, fulfilling a mandate from the 2005 Defense Base Realignment and Closure Commission.

Leadership has considered the move a good fit for the 176th Wing for several reasons.

Goodbye Wave. A Guardsmen from the Alaska Air National Guard’s 176th Wing waves goodbye as others watch the last C-130 depart Kulis Air National Guard Base in February.

“Although we love this area around Kulis and will always be connected to it, JBER offers the wing growth as a team and a partnership that works.”

– Brigadier General Charles “Chuck” Foster, 176th Wing Commander

“We have 100 percent cooperation with the active duty Air Force, Army, and Army National Guard regarding our transition onto the base,” Foster said. “It will streamline our support services, capture efficiencies of scale and add more value to the taxpayer’s dollar.”

In addition, the 176th Wing has taken on a more global role and entered into partnerships with the active duty. For instance, the Alaska Air National Guard’s 249th Airlift Squadron is an active associate unit with the active duty’s 517th Airlift Squadron; together they fly the C-17 Globemasters all around the planet.

The move also gives the 176th more room for future expansion.

“Having outgrown our old facilities, this gives us room to grow,” said Chief Master Sergeant Timothy Delph. “It also helps the active duty see the contributions of the Guard to the overall fight.”

“We have a great future here at JBER,” Foster said. ■

Alaska Guard Rugby Team Receives International Recognition

By Kalei Rupp and Private First Class Karina Paraoan, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Alaska National Guardsmen had the rare opportunity to be a part of the first-ever Alaska National Guard-sponsored rugby team to compete in a worldwide tournament held in Las Vegas in February.

The team, known as the Alaska Maulers, consists of Alaska National Guardsmen, active duty Soldiers, a Navy reservist and civilian rugby players.

The Las Vegas Invitational Tournament was the official tournament for all teams of different ages and skill levels associated with the USA Sevens International Tournament and Festival. The annual event featured club teams from across the United States and Canada, as well as select countries from around the world.

The Alaska Maulers placed fifth out of 12 teams in the men's elite division. They finished with a 4-3 record.

"We scored first, and the stadium erupted."

– Sergeant First Class Donald Gum

"We had a great time during the tournament," said Sergeant First Class Donald Gum, Recruiting and Retention Command, Alaska Army National Guard. "We were known as the 'Guard team from Alaska' and had news agencies waiting on the sidelines after all our games wanting to interview us. We received a lot of great recognition."

Members of the Alaska Maulers began playing together in late October 2010 when they started preparing for the tournament. They faced some tough competition in Las Vegas where the first team they played was against Kamikaze International, England's all-star rugby team.

"We scored first, and the stadium erupted when we did," Gum said. "They ended up beating us 24-19, but after the game, the coach came up to us and said we were the most physical team they played while traveling."

Captain August Manelick, an active duty Soldier, and Lieutenant Commander Dennis Gum Jr., a Navy reserve officer, are the captains of the team.

"We have some of the best military players in the country playing on our team right here in Alaska," Gum said. ■

Top Forty under 40

By Staff Sergeant Karima Turner, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... An Alaska National Guardsman and Department of Military & Veterans Affairs employee were among the 40 Alaskans honored as the state's "Top Forty under 40."

Captain Amy Slinker and Ryan Ray were selected by the Anchorage Chamber of Commerce and Alaska Journal of Commerce as two of the state's leading professionals for demonstrating professional excellence and a commitment to their communities.

Slinker, the commander of the Alaska Army National Guard's 134th Public Affairs Detachment and director of marketing for Pfeffer Development in Anchorage, has been highly involved in her community since she moved to Alaska in 2005. She said both her civilian career and her military duty has benefited the other.

"Any successes I've had in my civilian life have made me a better Soldier," Slinker said. "My successes in the Guard have made me a better employee in my civilian career. As a civilian, I take a lot of pride in serving as a Guard member. I know that every day I'm representing the Alaska National Guard, whether I'm at my civilian job or serving the community. I take into account that my actions always need to reflect the high standards of the Army and the Alaska National Guard."

In addition to her military service, Slinker found it important to become even more deeply involved in the state she's grown to love, volunteering hundreds of hours to the Public Relations Society of America and getting involved with other organizations and events including Big Brothers Big Sisters, Construction (benefiting Food Bank of Alaska), B Troop 1-40th Cavalry Family Readiness Group, Alaska National Guard Operation Santa Claus, Alaska National Guard Officers Association, Alaska Federation of Natives Conference and the Alaska Run for Women.

"It's extremely important that as Guard members we really get to know our community and become a part of it; I hope that junior Soldiers take advantage of the opportunities of both worlds," Slinker said.

Ryan Ray, special assistant II for the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs is by Alaska terms a "sourdough," born and raised in Alaska, and has used his education to benefit his community.

Day to day, Ray manages special projects for the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs, but on his "off" time, Ray, who has a background as a substance abuse counselor, founded and chairs a successful non-profit substance abuse treatment center in Wasilla and owns and runs Areli Coaching and Consulting.

"I was nominated not only for the things I do for the state but because I'm also the founder and chairman of Set Free Alaska, which is a very innovative and progressive treatment center modeled after a center in Louisiana that is the model for President Bush's model program for faith-based treatment centers in the nation," Ray said. "I was a substance abuse counselor for years and really saw a huge need in Alaska. It took a lot of time thinking and praying about it, but I opened the center and adapted it to fit the culture and people of Alaska. I also own and run a consultant company which offers life coaching, executive business coaching and profit engineering, all geared to assist people in becoming more successful in their lives."

Ray said becoming a "Top Forty under 40" was never a goal of his, but he's proud and honored because he feels it reflects well on DMVA and his other ventures.

"Anytime you work in the kinds of fields I do, credibility is really important and so you have to work extremely hard to build that credibility and maintain it. Being honored as one of the 'Top Forty under 40' will allow me to continue to help others through my work."

A few of the special projects Ray is currently involved in for DMVA are facilitating the Alaska Military Force Advocacy and Structure Team, an executive-level advisory group to the governor on maintaining military force structure in Alaska, working on the continued development of the Alaska Aerospace Corporation, with a goal to make the Kodiak Launch Complex the premier launch site in the United States for rockets, and streamlining access to the Joint Pacific Alaska Range Complex to better enhance military training.

Ray encourages other young people to take advantage of every opportunity because you never know where it will lead.

"The two things that I've really worked hard at are understanding that every day you have an opportunity to make an impact and what you choose to do with that opportunity is really what sets you apart." ■

GI BILL 2.0 GIVES STRONGER BENEFITS

By Verdie Bowen, State Veterans Affairs Office

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... New enhancements to the GI Bill mean stronger benefits for most veterans, reflecting the changing needs of today's military members seeking higher education.

The president signed into law the new GI Bill 2.0, which reforms the Post-9/11 GI Bill. While the changes have added better benefits for most, there were some reductions in order to fund the overall program. The start date for the GI Bill 2.0 is Aug. 1, 2011, with the education enhancements beginning Oct. 1, 2011.

THE GAINS:

- National Guard members who didn't qualify under the old rules can now use both AGR and Title 32 service to count toward their Post-9/11 GI Bill eligibility.
- Active-duty service members and their eligible spouses will qualify for the $1,000 annual book stipend.
- Students attending 100 percent of their classes online (distance learning) can now qualify for a housing (living) stipend of up to $673.50 a month for full-time enrollment.
- Veterans seeking all degrees – undergraduate through doctorate – will have 100 percent of the in-state tuition and fees paid for by the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs if eligible, as long as they attend a state operated (public) institution of higher learning.
- Veterans seeking vocational, technical, certificate, on-the-job training and apprenticeship programs will be able to use the Post-9/11 GI Bill.

- Veterans who need to take placement exams to apply for school (LSAT, GRE, GMAT, SAT, ACT) will be able to take the exams under the GI Bill.
- Eligible National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and U.S. Public Health Service personnel will be able to transfer Post-9/11 benefits to dependents.
- Vocational rehabilitation participants will have the option to use their Post-9/11 housing stipend instead of the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment subsistence rate. They will receive twice the housing stipend in Alaska.

THE LOSSES:

- Veterans who rely on the housing stipend to cover their living expenses during mandatory school break periods will find the payments end during such breaks.
- Veterans enrolled less than full-time will see their housing stipend prorated to match their rate of pursuit – the number of credit hours taken each term.
- Veterans whose private school tuition exceeds $17,500 a year will have to find alternative means for covering their tuition. (Note: Yellow Ribbon still applies and may be available to help cover the additional expenses.)

The new GI Bill gives veterans 15 years after separation/retirement to use the benefits. One of the best investments our country provides to our veterans is the education programs offered to them. ■

Alaskan Employers Have 'Total Force' VISION

By Pete Jensen, ESGR Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Alaskan employers from Fairbanks traveled to Florida in January to gain insight on how the National Guard and Reserve forces integrate into the Department of Defense "Total Force."

Participants spent four information-packed days on tours and briefs pertaining to the Guard and Reserve's duties and missions. The employers sharpened their awareness of Guard and Reserve members' environment, as well as duties and missions.

Employers went on a tour of MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., and received briefings on the U.S. Central Command, U.S. Special Operations Command, 290th Joint Communications Support Squadron, Navy Operational Support Center, U.S. Coast Guard Air Station Clearwater, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The trip to Florida and back to Alaska also gave employers a better understanding of what the troops do. Participants traveled to MacDill Air Force Base from Eielson Air Force Base on board an Alaska Air National Guard KC-135R Stratotanker from the 168th Air Refueling Wing. Each flight took approximately seven and a half hours and gave employers a personal understanding of what the troops endure while flying for hours on end.

In all, Alaska's ESGR employers said they gained an in-depth awareness and appreciation for what their reserve component employees do when they are away from their civilian occupations for military duties. ■

Be a Volunteer to Help At-Risk Youth Succeed

By Alaska Military Youth Academy Staff

CAMP CARROLL, Alaska ... Volunteerism is at the heart of what makes America great! Are you looking for an opportunity to directly affect the lives of Alaskan youth and the future of the state and country?

The Alaska Military Youth Academy provides an opportunity for spouses, military members and friends to participate and help. We have opportunities throughout the program all year for either hands-on involvement in the field or in the classroom with physical training, teaching vocational education classes, administrative tasks or assistance with mentoring.

The Alaska Military Youth Academy's National Guard Bureau ChalleNGe Program is designed to provide life coping skills and meet the educational needs of at-risk 16- to 18-year-old Alaskans. Our mission is to motivate young men and women to become successful citizens, with the values, skills, education and self-discipline to succeed as adults.

During the busy Pre-ChalleNGe Program (acclimation period), candidates are introduced to many aspects of military culture and given the opportunity to acclimate to the physical and mental aspects of the program. This time would be familiar to anyone who has been through a similar military indoctrination period. Training focuses on teamwork, self-discipline, close-order drill, code of conduct, leadership and followership and physical fitness. During this period, candidates are also given a glimpse of the academic structure and the expectations of the academy.

The program is a 22-week residential school based on the traditional military training model. Cadets are instructed in life coping skills, job skills, responsible citizenship, academic excellence, leadership and followership, health and hygiene, physical fitness and service to the community.

During the residential phase, cadets can work toward receiving their high school diploma and/or GED. Cadets can also obtain various certifications by participating in specific work readiness programs such as Culinary Arts, ETT, Microsoft A+ and National Center for Construction and Research/Carpentry.

The Academy provides continuing mentorship and resources to the graduate during the 12-month post-residential after-care phase. During the program, cadets have weekly contact with their mentors. Mentors help support the cadets during the residential and post-residential phases of the program.

The Alaska Military Youth Academy has been fortunate to have many National Guard members volunteer as mentors and team leader assistants throughout the years. We are always looking for National Guard members to mentor the cadets and/or work with academy staff during one of the most crucial times of the program, the acclimation period: Pre-ChalleNGe Program.

If you or someone you know would like more information to volunteer, be a mentor and/or to volunteer to work alongside program staff, please contact the Recruiting, Mentoring and Placement Supervisor, Deb Morton at (907) 384-6120 or deborah.morton@alaska.gov. ■

Family Programs

Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program

By Kimberly Leary, Family Programs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Greetings from the Alaska National Guard Joint Services Support team! It's been a very busy time for us as we continue to provide quality services to military members and their families from all of our armed forces. We would like to highlight one of our services: the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program.

You hear it in the news often enough, but the following statistics are worrisome enough that they're worth repeating:

- Alaska has the highest rate per capita in the country for rape – true for 23 out of the last 30 years. (FBI's Uniform Crime Report, <http://www.fbi.gov/ucr/ucr.htm>).
- Alaska's reported rate of rape per capita is 2.6 times the national average. (FBI's UCR).
- Anchorage has the ninth highest sexual assault rate of any city in the United States. Fairbanks is ranked first. (FBI's UCR).
- The Fairbanks rape rate is 4.7 times the national average. (FBI's UCR).
- Alaska's child abuse rate is six times higher than the national average. (Department of Public Safety / AK CDVSA Annual Report for FY 2006).
- Native American and Alaska Native women are two to two-and-a-half times more likely to be sexually assaulted than women of all other ethnicities in the United States.

(Amnesty International Report, 2007: www.amnestyusa.org; National Survey of Violence Against Women 2006, <http://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/210346.pdf>).

This is why the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program is so critical. The Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Program reinforces the National Guard's commitment to eliminate incidents of sexual assault through a comprehensive policy that centers on awareness and prevention, training and education, victim advocacy, response, reporting and follow-up.

Air and Army policy promotes sensitive care and confidential reporting for victims of sexual assault, and accountability for those who commit these crimes. Leading this program is the Alaska National Guard Joint Forces Headquarters Sexual Assault Response Coordinator, Gretchen Nealy.

It is the responsibility of the SARC to provide prevention education, training and direct services to address the problems associated with domestic violence and sexual assault in the military. It is through the SARC and other trained victim advocates that this program provides its services, to include the victim's right to choose from restricted, unrestricted and limited reporting options.

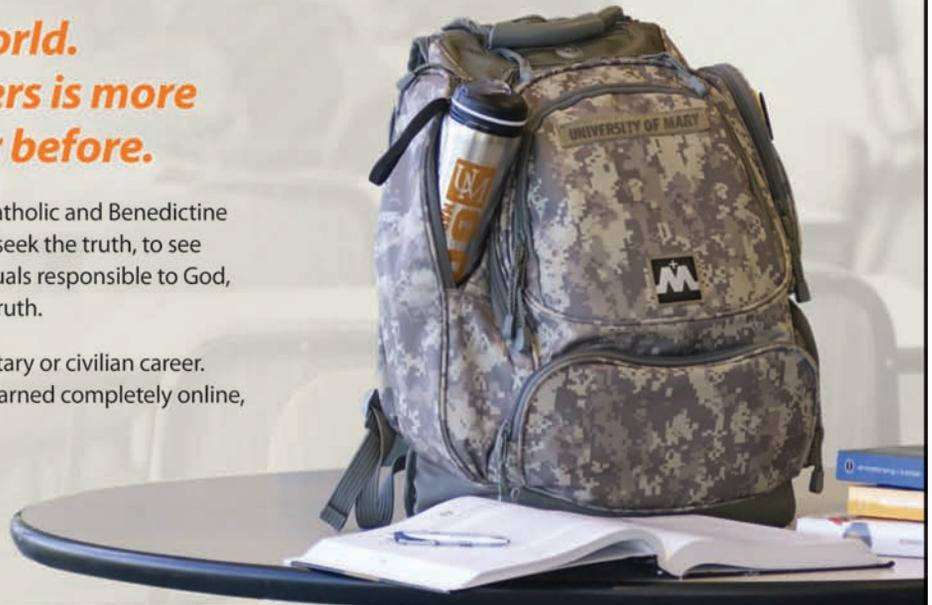

There is much to this program, and its importance cannot be stressed enough. For more information, or to learn about your rights as a victim, please contact Gretchen Nealy for a completely confidential conversation at (907) 428-6219/6147 local to Anchorage, nation-wide toll-free at (888) 917-3608 or via email at gretchen.nealy1@us.army.mil. ■

WEAR ME,

YOU BELIEVE IN KARMA. AFTER
THE ROUGH LIFE YOU'VE LIVED, THINGS
FINALLY GOT BETTER. NOW YOU HAVE A
CHANCE TO GIVE BACK. WHY NOT QUIT
SMOKING, AND SAVE YOURSELF AGAIN.

SINCERELY, ME
